Leaflet number: 922 Version: 1

When you attended for your breast screening appointment today you informed the radiographer of a problem in your left or right breast.

What happens next?

This symptom has been noted and will be taken into account when your mammograms are assessed.

Will I be called back for further tests?

If your mammograms are normal you will receive a letter confirming this, and you will not be called for any further tests.

What if my symptom continues?

If your symptom continues to worry you, please contact your GP.
